I.e., take 1 from above: 8 and 9 take 2 from above: 8 and 3 take 3 from above: 9 and 2 I have tried indexOf but it does not work as I would like. Is there a way to retrieve the indices or is it not possible in general in Spark? I have other problems that I am trying to solve and don't have the luxury of creating an individual RDD of indices and then use select like I do with a row in a jTable. Thanks! A: val indices = sc.parallelize(Seq(8, 9)).collect() indices.zipWithIndex.map(x => x._2 - 1).collect() // Array[Int] = Array(-1, -1, 0, 1) I use this in a mapping with a user-defined function that returns a Pair. With only 2 pairs, it gives the simple result: indices.zipWithIndex.map { case (x, i) => i } res1: Array[Int] = Array(0, 1, 1, 2) Many types of technologies have been developed to facilitate secure processing of electronic data. Typically, the data is protected against access by unauthorized individuals using passwords or other security measures, including encryption algorithms. However, conventional encryption algorithms are generally designed to be complex and difficult for a user to remember, thus increasing the likelihood of failures in security. To address this problem, various electronic device features have been developed to decrease the complexity of an encryption algorithm and to allow users to keep it easily in mind.
